Thus, cocaine stimulates the brain reward system more effectively than the behaviors that the reward system evolved to reinforce! Cocaine substances abuse essay question to increase dopamine levels by inhibiting monoamine dopamine, serotonin, and norepinephrine re-uptake from the synaptic cleft 1,2,3,4,6,7.

The primary effects of cocaine on reinforcement involve its ability to bind to the dopamine transporter and prevent re-uptake of dopamine 2. By inhibiting dopamine re-uptake, it increases dopamine in the reward system. Amphetamines both decrease the re-uptake of dopamine and directly increase the neuronal release of dopamine 1,2,3,4 Many experiments have shown the importance of dopamine in the rewarding effects of amphetamines.

For example, dopamine agonists substances that can substance abuse essay question for dopamine by binding to the same receptors and producing the similar effects decrease amphetamine self-administration in animals 1,3.

On the other hand, dopaminergic blockade antagonists decreases amphetamine self-administration in rats by preventing substance abuse essay question binding, thereby preventing its dopaminergic effects 3.

Similarly, lesions to the dopaminergic neurons in the NA lead to long lasting decreases in self-administration of amphetamines 3. These examples emphasize how drugs increase dopamine levels and stimulate the substance abuse essay question pathway.

Nicotine increases dopamine efflux in the reward pathway by mimicking substance abuse essay question at presynaptic nicotinic receptor sites, and exciting dopaminergic neurons 2. Nicotine receptors are located throughout the brain; however, nicotine exerts its greatest effects on brain reward in the NA 1,2,3. Nicotinic antagonists, chemicals which block the actions of nicotine at its receptor, inhibit dopamine release while nicotinic agonists increase dopamine release 1,2. Thus, nicotine leads to increased dopamine concentrations in the brain reward pathway like other drugs of abuse.

Caffeine blocks the actions of adenosine, an inhibitory neurotransmitter, by binding to its receptor and preventing post binding changes from taking place 2. Since the neurotransmitter adenosine is substance abuse essay question the safety on a gun, when it is removed, neurons begin to fire. By blocking the effects of adenosine, caffeine leads increased firing of dopaminergic neurons. This is especially evident in the NA 4,5. A balance between the negative effects of the drug and positive feelings associated with stimulation of the brain reward system determine if an individual will enjoy and continue using the substance or not 1,2.

The closer positive and negative effects are to the actual time of drug use, the more likely we are to associate these effects with the drug. Unfortunately, the negative consequences of drug use often come much later and more unpredictably compared to the immediate pairing of drug administration and reward.

These medications, when taken, cause the abuser to become extremely ill when they engage in drinking. Instead of experiencing the negative effects of alcohol the next day hangover or years later liver disease they experience unpleasant effects such as nausea, vomiting, and flushing in closer proximity to substance abuse essay question which opposes the normally immediate positive reward of the drug see above.

Although these drugs have been effective for some individuals by case report, these treatments have failed to show substance abuse essay question in numerous clinical trials 1. However recent work by Carroll et al demonstrates that Antabuse can be effective in preventing cocaine dependent individuals from relapsing into cocaine This can be accomplished in two ways. First, we can give drug antagonists, or drugs that block the addicting effects of the dopamine reward system.

For example, dopamine blocking agents have been shown to diminish intake of all drugs of abuse in animal studies 2. However, application in humans has been less promising. In humans, the euphoria induced by amphetamine administration is attenuated by dopamine blocking agents. Thus, when the drug no longer increases dopamine levels and causes feelings of well being, the desire for the drug may diminish. Bupropion, a dopamine agonist, has been shown in nicotine addiction but has not been shown to be substance abuse essay question in cocaine addiction.

Medications, which more directly influence neurotransmitters other than dopamine, have also shown promise in decreasing substance use. History[edit] The use of drugs cover letter
